The best anti-anything, healer and destroyer of illusions is conscious awareness. Psychedelics come in second. I am stating that. No need to argue about it, I am not interested. With that said, psychedelics are infinitely better than man's science and pharmacopoeia.

Have you ever found it odd that a side effect of Cymbalta, a leading anti-depressant, is suicide? It seems counterintuitive, but in a country where medicine is dictated by Big Pharma, such a paradox is hardly surprising. - John Blatt Do you or have you ever used psychedelics with intent for self-discovery / conscious awareness? It is truly and so deeply beneficial. At least it was for me. I had my first psychedelic experience last weekend. It had a huge impact on me. It just helped in every way.

- John Blatt I feel my own inner Great Work (self-work) is enhanced and strengthened by the proper use of natural psychedelics, never in place of my own inner work. Self work is not easy most of the time. At the age of 43 and now truly discovering natural psychedelics and their incredible aid in the Great Work I cannot turn away from them. There is a reason Mark Passio has Entheogens as a major solution for the healing and freeing of ourselves and the world. I never really gave it much thought before, never using any such things before, but something was urging me to do so and I am glad I did.

I had psilocybin, a medium dose, and took it into me with reverence, honesty and intent, not for fun. I meditated during the height of the experience and it was truly incredible. I will write a blog on it soon. But I encountered, much to my surprise, a non-human intelligence, a masculine presence. My intent was to know myself better and what I was shown was amazing. Its hard to describe the undscribable.

It left me in awe and with a renewed sense of hope for our future. It enriched my soul by helping see who I really was and THAT made a permanent positive change in my consciousness. I feel I met a true ally of who I was, a true friend to me, and I am so very grateful.

I am going to post Passio's podcasts 129 and 130 about psychedelics here soon. He is awesome on the subject (like everything else).

Kris Nelson I understand it. Thank you. I just don't have the desire for it I once did. It's not a "need", and yes indeed it can be helpful as tool in healing. That is my position on it that I have mentioned before in some of my work. Healing is where it is most beneficial, and I know I would benefit and learn from healing with it as well.

Here is an important part of Mark's podcast 129 that I have used for explanation of the healing power to help one get started, but then doing the work ourselves. My position may differ from Mark's, but what he says here has the aspect I have come to understand more deeply. It's not an innate tool, but external tool to assist if required, most specifically for healing: psychological, emotional, physical, many things.

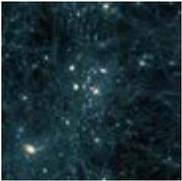

--- From "The Pleasure Trap" article:

"You do not get healed immediately. It's about revisiting that realm, working in that realm and confronting yourself when it has dropped you back down from the elevator. It's going to the top floor and it has dropped you back down to the ground floor so now you know where the work is to do upon yourself. It doesn't take you up to the top floor and leave you up there. It takes you to the top floor of the elevator, opens the doors, shows you what's there to see what you have to work toward, closes the doors and goes back to the first floor and kicks you out. Now do the work to get up there on your own."

The last part is the most important to understand. If you need a glimpse to help you heal, ok, but then don't get attached to it, don't be dependent on it. Do the hard work yourself! The real work needs to be done on the ground, not in the clouds, not in another realm, not in another state of being where you are immersed in "feel-good" sensations, where you are detached from action in the world. Use the "tools" if you need help to heal yourself, then let go of them and do the hard work yourself by developing the courage and willpower do it on your own.

<http://evolveconsciousness.org/pleasure-trap/>

That's my take on it. I don't discourage people from using it, but I do discourage its dependence as an external tool for self-discovery, self-realization, self-actualization, etc.

John Blatt I want to be honest here. This Pleasure Trap article seems to me to smack of ignorance with regards to psychedelics. Granted, I have had only one experience so far, but from what I experienced and what men like Hancock, Rogan, Hardy, the McKennas, Bill Hicks, etc., all share the same thing I experienced and that is an intelligent and benevolent consciousness that interacts with you in a familial way. That even the "bad trips" and the negative experienced are having the darkness within you exposed and brought to light. It is all intimate and that is why it is so powerful. This person in this article speaks like its all a mechanical process that's impersonal and cold.

Statements like "You do not get healed immediately", "dropped you", "Kicks you out" smacks of ignorance to me. I highly doubt that the writer has any real experience in psychedelics in saying such things like this. Everyone that I have ever read or talked to or watched with regards to real psychedelic experiences have never said anything like this.

Dependency is so far from what I am about in every area of life. Responsibility, freedom, and sovereignty is what it's all about. In my opinion as well as the opinion of Graham Hancock and Joe Rogan (I've heard them say this with their own mouths) that natural psychedelics, especially if used with intention and respect (which is what I am all about too), are basically impossible to become dependent on or abuse. THEY won't let you, if you are true and honest in your usage of them. What I experienced was amazing and that experience, though amazing, has put something in me that is even LESS dependent in my person than I was before I had that journey with the sacred plant. From everything I know (and I have studied A LOT over the past several years on psychedelics without ever even using them) it helps you to be healthier a person mentally and spiritually, not the other way around, if used correctly.

I get that so many people, even in the consciousness and truth "movements", are against psychedelics. From the many people I have heard from that are against it in some way or other they seem to feel that it is "cheating" or "a shortcut" in the Great Work. As if somehow psychedelics are wrong to use or a crutch in self-work. "To be truly enlightened / conscious you must struggle and do all the work yourself, to not depend on or use drugs for self work. You gotta earn that shit, not take the easy way for true conscious awareness!" That's basically what I have heard from both New Agers and Truthers since I have been bringing this all up. I used to believe (and now I know first-hand) that these plants / fungi are aids to use and are NOT cheats or shortcuts in our own inner Great Work. They have been given to us by the creator for our self work. I think to willfully ignore them is not a honorable thing in the life of the Awakened. This is why this information is being spread now like wildfire. THEY want us to grow and learn from them, to help us help ourselves. That is one of the things that was given to me in my psychedelic experience. I am just sharing my heart here.

In my opinion, prove to me that you have taken psychedelics seriously, use them consciously and with respect and intent, and have quite a bit of experience in their proper use and I will really respect any negative or derogatory information on psychedelics. But if you or anyone else do not have the actual first-hand knowledge and experience, how can I or any other consciously aware person take them seriously? I am not trying to be rude here, just honest. I want to hear from those who have truly explored these arenas and can speak from a place of wisdom and true understanding.

I will NEVER promote dependency or irresponsibility with these amazing plants. Yet for anyone to say "I don't need it" without ever truly experiencing it at least once is not being very conscious in my opinion. I think those who say "I don't need it" probably need it the most. That's just my opinion. Like saying "Oh I don't need to hear that" with regards to essential truths like Natural Law or others. In my opinion, being aware is recognizing that you might actually need to hear the hard truths or experience things that are outside your present understanding or experiences. That's where I was at. I am not trying to put you down or talk down to you. I respect you and therefore talk straight to you. This is what I wish to do for everyone, especially myself. I am so glad I decided to be brave enough to take those mushrooms and follow my intuition. If I hadn't I would not be as rich as I am right now.

Everyone is free to do as they will within Natural Law. If you say they are not for you without really experiencing them, then that is completely fine and I wish you the very best. I really mean that too. For me personally, I know that there have been many times where I have thought that I knew what was best for me when I really didn't. That has happened time and again in my life and I have missed out on some incredible things because of it. Yet I have hopefully gained SOME humility because of my lack of self-knowledge and am able to be more aware of my real needs. Anyways, please know that I am just seeking to be open and real with you even if I might be at risk of being too CARE-FULL. Blessings my friend.

Kris Nelson 3 comment posts, 1 was too long for FB.

Thanks for the comment. I will give my own detailed comment about your comment. There is a semantic misunderstanding from the message I deliver to the message you receive.

I still repeat my sound judgment on the issue as partially encapsulated in Mark's quote on its proper use.

"I don't discourage people from using it, but I do discourage its dependence as an external tool for self-discovery, self-realization, self-actualization, etc."

You seem to have missed the key qualifier: dependence. And did you read The Pleasure Trap article? Because that is what I am talking about. How is it "complete ignorance of psychedelics"? LOL. You can judge what I say any way you wish, but in this case you're not reading what I wrote, in the article, or above comment.

I see you stated:

JB:

"Statements like "You do not get healed immediately", "dropped you", "Kicks you out" smacks of ignorance to me. I highly doubt that the writer has any real experience in psychedelics in saying such things like this. Everyone that I have ever read or talked to or watched with regards to real psychedelic experiences have never said anything like this."

So I see you didn't read the article, at least not clearly if you did, yet make the judgment about its ignorance? Interesting. Please revise your data processing steps to see how you failed in this regard. Condemnation without investigation, or properly reading what is said and hence not investigating it properly, is ignorance. So please understand what is being said, rather than react through an attachment to these psychedelics. Not attachment you might say? Yes, it is. You didn't even read what I said or who said it, or understand it. That spells out attachment, when you can't read words properly. The attachment belief is inhibiting rational processing capabilities.

Why do I say this? Because I know you didn't read the article, or understand it if you did, from your own expression of words! LOL. How do I know you didn't read the article, or if you did, didn't understand what I said above? The quote just above, where you say the quote I used is from someone who "smacks of ignorance" and has no "real experience in psychedelics", is from Mark Passio, podcast 129, as I mentioned in the above comment. But this declaration of source, being from Mark Passio, seems to have passed right over your conscious mind, due to your attachment and not really reading what I said, you were blinded from accurately reading. You were not reading to understand, you were reading what I said and experienced tension about my alleged "ignorance" regarding psychedelics, i.e. how you read what I said vs. how you personally understand psychedelics. That is why you needed to deny what I said from inexperience, because, for you, I cannot grasp their importance without doing them as you did? Yet, I have stated their importance... "healing: psychological, emotional, physical, many things." So I don't deny their potential helping capacity. Semantic misunderstandings are such a pain.

So again, here is what Mark Passio said in podcast 129 that encapsulates the overuse dependence on using it over and over instead of doing the hard work yourself that I am getting at. Mark is the person who said what you claim is someone who has no real experience with psychedelics: "I highly doubt that the writer has any real experience in psychedelics in saying such things like this."

MP:

"You do not get healed immediately. It's about revisiting that realm, working in that realm and confronting yourself when it has dropped you back down from the elevator. It's going to the top floor and it has dropped you back down to the ground floor so now you know where the work is to do upon yourself. It doesn't take you up to the top floor and leave you up there. It takes you to the top floor of the elevator, opens the doors, shows you what's there to see what you have to work toward, closes the doors and goes back to the first floor and kicks you out. Now do the work to get up there on your own."

Mark said this, he has experience, yet you deny the validity of what he said. I don't have Mark's experience, and I don't have your experience, but I can still read and understand what Mark is saying, unlike you, due to your attachment here. But, for you, this lack of experience that you or Mark had, negates my ability to understand and express certain issues with using psychedelics? Interesting how you conclude that... I suppose no one can express the wrong-doing in war without having gone through a war to experience it, then and only then will their criticism will be valid? Hmmmm, that doesn't add up to me. You can't negate my valid criticism, that Mark Passio also understands, just because I haven't experienced that same thing you have. Nowhere do I deny your experience, or its help. Do you see where your confusion is against what I have been saying?

The quote from Mark above says it, you just have to be able to read properly and not let your attachment to belief that you hold dear cloud your ability to discern true statements. This new "appreciation" you have might be more like devotion and cult of personality like in the initial "riding the high" of its healing affect and importance in changing your life.

Kris Nelson I was going to mention this in my first reply to your comment yesterday, but decided it wasn't necessary and might be incorrect. But now, I see that I was correct in my perception of your infatuation. Step back, and see what Mark is saying, and what I am saying. Nowhere do I knock psychedelics for what they should be used for. I expressly state what they are to be used for. But, for you, my criticism is "false understanding" and ignorance...

JB:

"In my opinion as well as the opinion of Graham Hancock and Joe Rogan (I've heard them say this with their own mouths) that natural psychedelics, especially if used with intention and respect (which is what I am all about too), are basically impossible to become dependent on or abuse. THEY won't let you,"

That is good to hear.

JB:

"From the many people I have heard from that are against it in some way or other they seem to feel that it is "cheating" or "a shortcut" in the Great Work. As if somehow psychedelics are wrong to use or a crutch in self-work. "To be truly enlightened / conscious you must struggle and do all the work yourself, to not depend on or use drugs for self work. You gotta earn that shit, not take the easy way for true conscious awareness!" That's basically what I have heard from both New Agers and Truthers since I have been bringing this all up."

Mark says it in that quote. It takes you up, then when you go back down, you do the work yourself to get back there. You don't keep going back to the entheogen elevator ride up there, you do the hard work yourself. Do not keep using it, as a crutch, to reach self-discovery, self-realization, self-actualization, etc. The most rewarding is doing it yourself. We can all use help, and if someone feels the "need" to use it, then go for it. Is it necessary? No. I will mention this aspect later on, about those who consciously choose to change and align with Morality, vs. those in who get lost in psychedelics and meditation overuse and lack of conscious awareness to actualize greater good in themselves. I am not saying YOU, I am saying other users who fail to go further in taking over the reigns from where the entheogen left off. None of this criticism of the use of entheogens is an accusation against you, just to be overly clear about that. So please go back and read clearly what I am stating.

JB:

"THEY want us to grow and learn from them, to help us help ourselves. That is one of the things that was given to me in my psychedelic experience. I am just sharing my heart here."

As far them "wanting" it, lol, that might be overkill, but I get what you are saying. As mentioned, please take into account the infatuation and "cult of personality" aspect to something new that has an amazing affect upon you. Mark Passio had that affect on me at first, die hard devotion to his amazingness and genius, etc. Alex Jones had the same affect on me 8 years ago, etc. It lasted a few weeks then I saw past it. Now I don't fall for that person-infatuation anymore. I am familiar with this psychological influencing capability of that which affects one profoundly and the resulting loyalty and allegiance on has to defend this helpful affecter.

"negative or derogatory"

Yes, I express my understanding of the abuse of psychedelics and its dependence for gaining insight into ourselves. You can attempt to dismiss it as negative and derogatory, ok.

Tell me, all of these things people seek to help them, psychedelics, meditation, are you being shown how immoral you are? Are you being shown how your ways are wrong? Are you being shown how to change and let go of these illusions that have you acting in evil? How many people go vegan from psychedelics and meditation? Is Joe Rogan vegan for his amazing connection to these "consciousnesses" ? Do they see how valuable it is to stop engaging in immoral actions, or supporting stupidity? Joe supports a stupid/devolved Tesseract symbolism brain-damaging "sport" called UFC. Choosing to willfully support something that can damage the greatest gift the Creator has given any species, is not intelligence, and certainly not any awakening in that aspect of life regarding distractions and devolved actions that do not help us move forward, and certainly put some people backwards through their brain damage.

I don't have "respect" for people just because they took an entheogen and have some particular insights. I respect the Wisdom of Right-Action, i.e. Natural Law embodiment, being, living, etc.. I have gotten further in life by changing my actions in alignment with what is right, good and true, without psychedelics that so many others proclaim as such a great thing, yet fail to realize how it does not show them their how they fail in Moral ways. That requires deep inner-work, the conscious awareness kind, yourself, hard work. You did it. I did it. Many people do it, and they don't "need" these other tools, even though if they try them they can help them heal in others ways. But it is not a "need". It is a helper. Your conscious awareness is the NEED.

The only people I have heard who's expressions of consciousness promote psychedelics or meditation, Care for Truth and Morality, and have reached a position of deeper understanding NL to the point of the nonhuman animal issue are Mark Passio, and yourself, pretty much.

Is Graham Hancock vegan? I don't think so. Seems all of the praise for entheogens falls short of them taking up their own cross, and going deeper into the shadow themselves. They went to a certain depth with its help, and now they are satisfied, they can ignore the shadow they don't want to face about their wrong-actions.

Others I have met are far from more alignment with Natural Law due to their lack of conscious awareness and acknowledgment of the depth to which Natural Law goes. They are stagnating at their current level. No matter how much meditation they do, or how many intentional experiences with "entheogens" they have, they don't go all the way in Morality. Why is that? It would be interesting to see how many entheogen users have gone vegan as a result of the plant consciousness helping them achieve this level of understanding themselves to become self-actualized, self-realized, etc. with Natural Law.

JB:

"But if you or anyone else do not have the actual first-hand knowledge and experience, how can I or any other consciously aware person take them seriously? I am not trying to be rude here, just honest. I want to hear from those who have truly explored these arenas and can speak from a place of wisdom and true understanding."

Ok, I'll go take some, get some healing, then I can repeat what I said about its overuse and crutch as a tool for healing rather than doing the work myself? And then you will accept the Truth of this issue? I have addressed this above. My lack of direct experience, that you have, does not prevent me from reading what Mark said, while your attachment seems to prevent you from reading what Mark said, and even that I said Mark was the one that said it.

Deny what I am saying, that is your choice. I cannot do anything to make you read what I said or Mark said properly, other than to point out the issues with your statements and help you see the over-attachment you have to the tool that provided you with this profoundly affecting experience. I am trying to do so in this comment, which is really way too long, but this is the price to pay to clarify semantic misunderstandings or failure to read a message properly. It takes even more explanation lol I could have skipped, this, not spend time to respond, and just ignored what you said. But I prefer to clarify this misunderstanding in message deliver to message reception, as I expect you to be someone capable of revising their previous false-perceptual claims about a message you did not receive correctly. I tried to explain it with as few words and as clearly as possible before.

July 4 at 8:54am · Like

Kris Nelson To further demonstrate how your attachment has prevented you from accurately reading what I wrote, here is another demonstration of your quotes that show you "seeing" what I said differently. You really have imposed a perception on yourself that I am against psychedelics. That I am ignorant for making the judgments about forming a dependence in having it help bring people to become more consciously aware of reality, rather than the independence of taking up their own cross and doing it themselves, once the helper has shown you what you need to reach for yourself.

You said:

JB:

"Yet for anyone to say "I don't need it" without ever truly experiencing it at least once is not being very conscious in my opinion. I think those who say "I don't need it" probably need it the most. That's just my opinion. Like saying "Oh I don't need to hear that" with regards to essential truths like Natural Law or others."

I will repeat what I previously said, that you did not read correctly:

KN:

"It's not a "need", and yes indeed it can be helpful as tool in healing. That is my position on it that I have mentioned before in some of my work. Healing is where it is most beneficial, and I know I would benefit and learn from healing with it as well. "

I had expressly stated I KNOW I would benefit and learn from healing with it, but that it is indeed not a "need", and in my current state, "I do not need" to use it. You felt the desire to use entheogens, and gained something positive that I also would gain (surely indeed I don't doubt I would), but since I don't have the same desire, you conclude I "need it the most", and I am "not very conscious", lol. That is funny. There is a difference between an actual "need" it can provide you with, to get you started in beginning to see reality for what it is, and how you live, etc. (that can also be obtained through active conscious awareness and seeking out an understanding of reality apart from these entheogens), and the desire to gain some new perspective, insight, understanding, etc. from it. Please don't confuse the two and project that onto me. Maybe if I was some "dead" solipsist who didn't Care for Truth, yes then, either I would NEED to become consciously aware of the truth of reality myself, or have something else shake me and wake me up to face it.

Also, to compare the actual NEED for Moral understanding and living, to an entheogen experience to give you insight into something else that has nothing to do with Morality, is fallacious. One will actually lead to True Freedom and Peace. The other spiritual subjective experience is not required to actualize Morality in your core being. Bullshit you say? No, I have explained this earlier with entheogens/meditation and facing reality to become more of a Moral Being. Morality is irrelevant to those experiences it seems, as those people go in with intent, but they never face all the depths of their immorality, since those people FAIL to become more moral beings. True inner-work, shadow facing, is what will get one to change in more Moral alignment with Natural Law. That is bearing our own cross. I don't know how many ways I can state that it can help, you, but is not "needed".

It is not a "need". Please explain to me why it is a "need"? Without entheogens, we can't create True Freedom and Peace? Yup, right... entheogens are the only way to True Freedom and Peace. That is absurd. It is not a "need". Conscious awareness, evolving consciousness, is the real NEED. The entheogen can be a tool to bring things to conscious awareness, to help you grasp things you did not before, to "wake" you up to something, but they are not a "need". You can do all of that on your own, bearing your own cross. People choose not to do their own conscious inner-work. Those that are able to embark on that journey without entheogens don't "need" it.

The documentary "Stepping into the Fire" demonstrates this. If your in lack of care for Truth, don't question, doubt and learn about the illusion of reality, then ayauasca can sure as hell wake someone the fuck out of their bullshit LOL! Do it yourself, or get the plant to snap you out of the illusion, hehe!

Go ahead and do it if you want. If someone doesn't choose to do it, because it is not an actual "need", then that makes them "ignorant" in your book, ok, have fun with that false conception.

JB:

"In my opinion, being aware is recognizing that you might actually need to hear the hard truths or experience things that are outside your present understanding or experiences. That's where I was at. I am not trying to put you down or talk down to you. I respect you and therefore talk straight to you. This is what I wish to do for everyone, especially myself. I am so glad I decided to be brave enough to take those mushrooms and follow my intuition. If I hadn't I would not be as rich as I am right now. ."

Thank you for speaking honestly. I expect that from everyone. I don't deny any of the benefits it can bring, nor the richness of subjective experience it brings you.

I have expressed where you have made errors in your reception and perception of the message I was delivering. I knew this would happen at some point, that is why I stated first off in this thread:

"The best anti-anything, healer and destroyer of illusions is conscious awareness. Psychedelics come in second. I am stating that. No need to argue about it, I am not interested."

I had already foreseen this possible issue arising, as I understand many people's infatuation with psychedelics and not wanting to see how they are proper for initial healing use, but then people need to learn let go and do the work themselves. That is what I have been saying the whole time. Do not let it BECOME a crutch. Use it to heal if you need to heal, then let go. Some people can definitely have more beneficial use from it, like in Stepping into the Fire. But it is not a "need" for an initial "wake up".

I won't be responding like this in the future to clarify misunderstandings about the words I use to express a specific aspect of understanding regarding entheogens. It takes too much time. If you do not understand what I am saying, oh well. I can't make anyone understand something they do not want to. I do understand everything you have been saying about its use and benefit, and never have I said anything against it.

Yes, I am still ignorant. I don't have a problem with that fact, and I seek to alleviate my ignorance with those important issues that can bring me to actualize more Moral ways of being. Entheogens showing me something I don't yet see that is not related to Morality or actualizing True Freedom and Peace, is not too high up on my priority list. It was a while back, but not right now. Maybe that will change in the future. As has already been indicated by other intentional users that I mention above, they do not end up "seeing" or understanding true Morality in their subjective experience, nor trying to align themselves with it. Right now, I have no desire to have the subjective spiritual vision you and others have. It does not interest me. My own inner-work void of these helpers has gotten me further in Moral embodiment than others who have used them for guidance. Good luck to them on their path...

Peace.

John Blatt I have tried to respond to you on several occasions today, but I keep finding that I just don't care. It is rare that anyone has gone to such great lengths to try to prove me wrong and to try to tell me about my own misperceptions. If I took the time to accurately reply to all that you wrote it would take way too much of my time and I am just not that interested to be honest. I took to heart all that you have said and will keep in mind, yet I know myself much better than anyone else and if I have any "attachment" to psychedelic mushrooms it is one of respect and care in their proper place, not a dependency whatsoever. I can say yes, I am "attached" and "dependent" and in love with Nature. One of the reasons why I am a vegan. Everyone, including vegans, needs a deeper connection to and relationship with Nature and this is one of the things that mushrooms HELP to do.

I don't feel I have to explain any more than this. Best wishes.
